

WORLD DOG

"RENAISSANCE DOG"

World dogs are not breeds created by humans with closed gene pools or artificially selected jobs. Nature is the breeder in this case, and has continued to create these dogs all over the world. Their physical forms indicate that they have no specific predominant job in their ancestry, other than to be good at simply being a dog.

You'll fall in love with your world dog because she's:

Flexible – Adaptive to change, she goes with the flow, and is at home in many environments.

Practical – She is observant, self-sufficient, undemanding, low-maintenance, and efficient.

Good-Natured – This dog is tolerant, solicitous, cooperative, docile, and level-headed.

You might find a world dog hard to live with because she's:

An opportunist – She's a trash scavenging and poop-eating machine, her essence being that of the original opportunistic dog looking for leftovers of any kind.

Got Your Number – Your world dog is a human behavior expert who is reading and watching your every move.

Self-Serving – Her agenda and interest is her "job;" working for you is not.

You might find yourself seeking professional help for:

- Peeing in the house
- Chewing on things that don't belong to her
- Getting on your furniture
- Barking at the neighbor's cats
- Stealing sandwiches off the coffee table
- Jumping on people
- Pulling on the leash
- Having her own agenda that may or may not involve following your directions
- Having trouble adapting to the pet life and captivity when removed from a free roaming lifestyle
